Massachusetts Pregnant Workers Fairness Act: Eliminating Pregnancy Discrimination

The experiences of pregnant workers around the Commonwealth reveal the need for legislation to protect them. They are too often forced to choose between a healthy pregnancy and their jobs – with serious consequences for them and their families – for lack of something as simple as being able to sit down or take extra bathroom breaks. The proposed legislation closes gaps in existing law by clarify what constitutes a reasonable accommodation for pregnancy and related conditions. It will ensure that employers have guidelines to follow and that a pregnant woman is treated fairly no matter where she happens to work.

Massachusetts Needs Strong Measures to Support Women in the Workforce

- Over half of all pregnant women and new mothers in Massachusetts are in the labor force and earning income to support their families.ⁱ
- Three-quarters of women entering the workforce in our country will be pregnant and employed at some point in their lives.ⁱⁱ Some of these women—especially those in physically strenuous jobs—will face a conflict between their duties at work and the demands of pregnancy.
- Pregnant women are pushed out of their jobs and often treated worse than other employees with similar limitations because the law does not guarantee reasonable accommodations for pregnancy.

Here's what's happening: One pregnant woman was not allowed to take breaks to sit—even after she fainted multiple times at her job.ⁱⁱⁱ A pregnant laundry worker lost her baby when her overtime was increased rather than decreased at her request.^{iv} A pregnant gas station manager wound up on public assistance because she wasn't allowed to sit.

PWFA Clarifies that State Law Covers Pregnant Women Who Need Minor Adjustments at Work

- The MA PWFA amends Section 4 of chapter 151B of the General Law, preventing discrimination based on pregnancy and requiring employers to accommodate conditions related to pregnancy, including the need to express breast milk for a nursing child, unless such doing so would pose an undue hardship on the employer.
Accommodations may include: more frequent or longer breaks, seating, light duty, assistance with manual labor, temporary transfer to less strenuous or hazardous positions, private non-bathroom space for expressing breast milk.
- The law would protect pregnant workers seeking accommodation from adverse employment consequences and prevent denial of opportunities based on need for accommodation.
- The PWFA would protect women from being required to take leave from their jobs and lose wages and benefits if another reasonable accommodation can be made.

Need for Greater Legal Clarity Has Been Recognized Across the Country

- California's decade-old law guaranteeing pregnant women reasonable accommodations in the workplace has been used countless times to help workers stay healthy and keep their jobs.^{vi}

- Laws in Alaska, Connecticut, Delaware, Hawaii, Illinois, Louisiana, Maryland, Minnesota, New Jersey, Texas, West Virginia, New York City, NY, Philadelphia, PA, Providence, RI and Central Falls, RI, and Washington, DC, also explicitly require employers to provide some accommodations to pregnant employees.^{vii}

Legislation Will Benefit Working Women, their Families, their Employers and the Public

- Women who need income but lack accommodations are often forced to continue working, risking their own health and the health of their babies.^{viii} Physically demanding work has been associated with an increased risk for preterm birth and low birth weight.^{ix} Stress from losing a job also can increase the risk of a premature baby and/or a baby with low birth weight^x; risks that may be avoided with a simple modification to keep a woman on the job.
- Proposed legislation will promote women's economic security during a critical time that is often filled with financial hardship, and would save taxpayers money in the form of unemployment insurance and other public benefits.^{xi}
- Legislation would provide clarity so employers can anticipate their responsibilities and avoid costly litigation. Employers benefit, too, from reduced turnover and increased productivity.^{xii}
- After California passed similar legislation, litigation of pregnancy cases actually decreased, even as pregnancy discrimination cases around the country were increasing.^{xiii} Hawaii's Civil Rights Commission reported a similar reduction in complaints and litigation after enactment.
