

Easter Monday

And then,

one morning, riding the train,
whistling through the gray blue dawn,

there it is again.

What you longed for, and endlessly refused—

music you thought had forgotten you.

No distant station. No earned reward.
Ordinary music— heard,

then not, then heard again.