International Programme in Addiction Studies (IPAS)

MSc via distance learning

A unique collaboration of three of the world's leading research universities in the field of addiction science.

THE UNIVERSITY of ADELAIDE

International Programme in Addiction Studies MSc

This Distance Learning programme is a collaboration between King's College London (UK), The University of Adelaide (Australia), and Virginia Commonwealth University (USA).

Students benefit from access to the online resources of all partner universities. Upon completion of the curriculum, students receive a triple-badge diploma jointly conferred by the three institutions.

The programme offers a unique opportunity to study addiction in its broadest sense, covering key issues from an international viewpoint.

Past students from this programme have taken leadership roles in clinical settings, policy positions in national and international organisations and further academic studies and research.

Students are exposed to cutting edge research on subjects ranging from the biological basis of addiction to addiction treatment, prevention and policy.

A unique programme offering insights into comparative international trends in policy, global epidemiology of substance-related morbidity and mortality, and evidence-based treatment and prevention practices.

Students have online access to lectures produced exclusively for IPAS by international experts in the addictions field.

Three nested graduate programme options available (PG Cert, PG Dip, MSc) to students from around the globe via distance learning.

Received 100% PTES student satisfaction rating.
